A -A.-WALL STREET AND FLATBUSH.

A few days since a wealthy New York banker, whose name is as familiar in Wall street as household worls, stopped at the office of JOHNSON. MILLER for a catalogue of their great sale of 548 Flatbush Lots. "I want you," he said to the auctioneers, "to mark on my map the exact locality of the property. I shall go there at once and then determine whether to invest my money in Flatbush or New One. Yesterday, meeting one of the irra, he exclaimed a very screet fits ground does not command the exact locality of which we would be a supposed to the command of the contiguity to Wall street. I want to the command of the contiguity to Wall street. I want the contiguity in Wall street. I want the contiguity in Wall street. I want the contiguity in Wall street. I want the command that the prevent of the command that the prevent of the common prices we pay. I made a few days since an oder (that I vesterally with drew) of more money for four up town lots than it will take to buy your entire list of Tuesday next. Now, I can judge something of the future growth of the metropolis, and am satisfied that the purchase of the latter will realize one hundred times more profit than that of the former. The advance in Flatbush will come, and that quickly; everybody will say I told you so, but I am one of the told you so who not only think but act. I will be at sale on Tuesday."
